Tenurial Conflicts in Kendal FMD

No	Village	Subdistrict	District	Area conflicted (ha)	Short Description
1	Cacaban	Singorojo	Kendal	77,2	The disputed land was a natural forest which was cleared by villagers, tilled, cultivated, harvested, and then fallowed. In 1954-1955 Djawatan Kehutanan (Forestry Agency) came to Cacaban. In 1958 FA obliged villagers to plant teak because, according to FA, the land was state land. FA officers said that although the land had been villagers' it became state's because villagers did not pay the land tax. Perhutani took over the land in 1961. There is unofficial levy for private teak and mahogany selling around Rp250.000 to Rp1million.
2	Kalirejo	Singorojo	Kendal	200	The land was an award from Regent for the village founders. The land had been cultivated for 50 years until Duth colonial government plundered it for plantation expansion. Villagers resisted but their leader was punished by hanging. The Dutch offered money for 75 years long-term land-rent, but it had never been paid. After independence (1945), Indonesian government did not redistribute the land but handed it over to FA and then to Perhutani. Villagers who still cultivated the land or collecting fuel wood was criminalized, reported to the police, interrogated, sometimes with violence (beating). Villagers were also stigmatized as member of Indonesian Communist Party (PKI), followed by imprisonment; some of them were exiled to outer island as political prisoners. In 1997—1998 villagers reclaimed the land. Perhutani offered cooperation and product-sharing, but villagers rejected it because the share is not proportional to the villagers work.
3	Ngareanak	Singorojo	Kendal	1.000	Identical with Kalirejo land history, the land disputed in Ngareanak village was part of Regent reward. When The Dutch expanded their plantation estate, villagers' house was destroyed and the land was sequestered, villagers were forced to leave. In 1997—1998 villagers resisted, reclaimed the land, and called for re-entitlement of the land. Perhutani restricts villagers' access to the land with many prohibition which could result in criminalization.
4	Gondang, Kuripan, dan Sengonan	Subah	Batang	160	When President Soekarno visited Jatisari, he ordered villagers to utilize unproductive land in that area. The land then became rice-field project and known as 'project-land'. Between 1966—1970, by Regent Decree, the land was closed. The rice plantation was destroyed by Regent's henchmen, and resisting farmers were evicted, killed, or exiled to Buru Island. Perhutani, then took over the land. In 1980 after Perhutani cleared cut the trees, villagers started to cultivate the land. In 1988 villagers started to demand rights upon land. Villagers organize themselves in PT3S and call for land redistribution, forest tenurial and management reform, also for stopping intimidation toward villagers.
5	Sigayam	Wonotunggal	Batang	58	The land in Sigayam villages was initially a natural forest. In 1919 Boschwezen (Dutch Colonial Forestry Agency) cleared cut the forest and took over the land. After independence the forest had been regrown and dense. Villagers started to cultivate the land. In 1971 Perhutani gave trees seedlin to be planted in the land and promised to pay planting wage to villagers. Not only the villagers have never been paid, the villagers were evicted from the land and forbidden to enter the forests.
